Boy, 15, killed trying to protect twin brother

1 charged in shooting during armed robbery

Chicago Tribune

Demario and Demacio Bailey, close-knit identical twins known within their South Side charter school community as the "Bailey boys," were raised in a home that prioritized schooling and safety.

A member of the school PTA and always on top of their grades, the boys' mother insisted on escorting them to and from Johnson College Prep in Englewood, one of the city's toughest neighborhoods. But like most 15-year-olds, Demario and Demacio were eager for more freedom. So their mother recently began allowing them to get around more on their own, said the boys' grandmother, Bernice Fitzpatrick.

Tragedy struck the family Saturday afternoon, when Demario was shot and killed as he tried to defend his brother during an armed robbery while the boys were walking just a few blocks from their school.

"They were raised to stick together," Fitzpatrick, 62, said Sunday. "We always said, 'Take after your brother, look after your brother.' "

A 17-year-old boy has been charged as an adult with first-degree murder, robbery and attempted robbery in the shooting, police said Sunday. The Chicago Police Department does not identify suspects who are minors even when they are charged as adults.

The shooting rocked the charter school community, where parents, teachers and classmates gathered Sunday to remember Demario, an honor roll student who was described as a kindhearted kid who stayed out of trouble.

"You hear all the time [after shootings] about, 'This was a good kid,' " said Jack Greenfield, a math teacher and football coach at Johnson who was Demario's algebra teacher. "This was actually a legit good kid."

Demario Bailey

Demario and Demacio had taken the bus Saturday afternoon to 63rd Street, where they got off and started walking west through a long, dark viaduct toward the school where Demacio had basketball practice, according to a police report. Four robbers confronted them under the viaduct, the report said.

Ordering the brothers to "give it up," the robbers started going through their pockets, the police report said. A struggle and fight ensued, and Demario, the older of the twins by five minutes, saw that one of the robbers was on top of his brother. He went to Demacio's aid, telling the assailant to "get off my brother," and was able to push the robber off, according to the report.

At that point, Demacio saw a weapon appear from one of the assailants and heard a shot go off, the report said. He thought Demario was right behind him as he ran away.

Demacio found his brother on the ground with a gunshot wound to his chest, the police report said. Demario was pronounced dead at the scene minutes later.

Classmates and teachers described the elder twin as a supportive peer both inside and outside of the classroom during a memorial service Sunday in the school gymnasium, where Demario spent many afternoons cheering for his brother on the basketball court.

Keontay Thompson, 19, a senior who plays football and basketball with Demacio, said he usually walks through the viaduct with the twins on the way to practice but wasn't with them Saturday when the shooting happened.

He said Johnson students know the area around the viaduct is dangerous because it's so poorly lit and not well-monitored.

"We always have to stick together," he said while standing Sunday at the site of the shooting as activists walked in the street waving signs that said "Stop gun violence NOW."

"It's really hurtful knowing I wasn't there to help him," Thompson said.

Garland Thomas-McDavid, founding principal at the charter school, said gun violence is something her students have had to deal with since the school opened in 2010.

Frustrated by what she views as a lack of attention to the dangers her students face, Thomas-McDavid issued a statement late Saturday saying that she wouldn't mind "if it takes [martial] law to get this in order."

"I know I speak for every educator who continuously deals with this type of tragedy in saying we are sick and tired of being sick and tired," Thomas-McDavid wrote. "The apologies are not enough, and after all the fanfare is over, someone still has to put their baby in the ground."

Thomas-McDavid opened the school Sunday to allow students and staff to grieve together. Asked if she would allow news cameras to film the gathering, the teary-eyed principal welcomed the cameras in.

"They need to see what the kids are going through," she said. "We just can't keep covering it up."

Find a holiday hookup

The Second City NETWORK
Atra Asdou
» @SecondCity Netwk

With the warm scent of synthetic cinnamon in the air, it's easy to get distracted from the real holiday tradition of feeling like you're going to die alone without ever having lived up to your family's expectations.

Lucky for you: The holidays are the perfect time to start dating.

Nervous yet? Good! Use that anxiety to say goodbye to warming yourself with a blow dryer while eating peppermint bark in bed and hello to kissing real human lips goodnight.

Here are some tips to make sure you secure that all-important holiday hookup.

Stake out Santa

While at the mall, wait along the perimeters of the Santa Land kiosk with a plate of cookies and milk. Once mall Santa gets off his shift, he's yours. Tell him to call Mrs. Claus and let her know he ain't comin' home tonight. Play Michael Jackson's "Dirty Diana" while you drive him to your parents' place to prove, once and for all, you are capable of being just like everybody else.

Go big at the office holiday party

You know Michael? That temp cutie with the taupe elbow-patched cardigan that makes his doe-eyes pop? You've spent all year crushin' on him hard, listening for hints that's he dateable like, "Well, I'm culturally Jewish," and "I wish office bonding meant helping impoverished families find better living situations."

Stealthily replace his assigned Secret Santa's gift bag with the present you've bought him.

Leave it wrapped on his desk with a note that reads, "Let's get married and watch 'Into the Woods' on Christmas." Then watch his chiseled face melt into figgy pudding as he unwraps that Zales box full of blood diamonds you bought using the corporate card.

Michael may have just been a temp, but now he's yours forever.

Remember: Family first

Tell your entire family that if they know anyone who is looking for love to send them your way. Deli workers, tollbooth workers, nursing home escapees. Don't limit yourself! Just sit back and let your creepy cousin Terri land you some digits. You'll find this alleviates all dinner table inquisitions your kin has about your love life because they're 100 percent involved! Win-win for everyone!

Now turn that blow dryer off, wipe the melted chocolate off of your chapped lips and mush! Because no matter which high school acquaintances stage garish engagement photos on your news feed and no matter how much snow spray you have to huff to keep happy, you'll always remember the true meaning of the holidays: Life is about relentlessly comparing what you lack to the seeming success of others.

HOW TO: ASK FOR A RAISE

Millennials have to play their cards right when negotiating a pay bump

By Megan Crepeau | REDEYE

Andrew Saenz had never asked for a raise before.

"I thought it was going to blow up right in my face," the 25-year-old Lincoln Park resident said. "It was my first time negotiating for anything like that [in] all my life."

Saenz had done part-time contract work at a small public relations firm for about two years before his bosses offered him a full-time position this fall. But he had asked around, and he figured that the salary they were offering was a bit low. And so, for the first time ever, he asked for a pay bump.

"I decided to take a risk, saying, I feel with my two years' time spent with this company, I know a lot of the clients, they know who I am, they're comfortable working with me ... people see my name on the email and know what kind of news to expect from me," he said. "I thought that was a particular advantage. I thought I deserved a little bit more salary based on that."

And it worked—after a bit of negotiation, Saenz will be getting about 5 percent more per year than he was originally offered.

Research shows that the Millennial generation expects raises, and often. Nearly half of them see pay bumps as a right, rather than a reward, according to a recent survey from Addison Group. More than a third of the survey's Millennial respondents said they were currently seeking a raise.

Maybe you're among them: At the end of the year, finances can be tight, and asking for a raise could be on your list of New Year's resolutions. But the path to more money can be tricky—you have to play your cards just right. Here's what experts have to say about how to get that extra cash.

Timing is key

Keep your ear to the ground about company finances, advises Judi Lansky, president of Lansky Career Consultants in Chicago. If things are going well, feel free to take advantage of that. But if you ask for a raise right after the boss lost a big account, for example, you're going to seem tone-deaf.

"You don't ask Mom to increase your allowance when Dad just lost his job," Lansky said.

And don't ask too soon after joining the team.

"I hear a lot of people with their first job out of college, they think, I'll go and work there for six months, and I'll ask for a raise and after one year I'll get a promotion," said Suzanne Lucas, the "Evil HR Lady" of advice site evilhrlady.org. "It makes you look a little naive."

> "I hear a lot of people with their first job out of college, they think, 'I'll go and work there for six months, and I'll ask for a raise and after one year I'll get a promotion.' It makes you look a little naive."
> —Suzanne Lucas, the "Evil HR Lady" for advice website evilhrlady.org, on the mistake college grads make

If you've recently completed a huge project or brought the company a bunch of money, then you're in a great position to ask for a raise—just don't do it too quickly, says Adam Ochstein, the CEO of human resources services company StratEx. It might look like you did the good work just to get the raise.

"Employers begin to question employee motives. They should wait a month or two after an accomplishment, while it's still fresh in the manager's mind, rather than directly after," Ochstein said in an email to RedEye.

If you know when your company generally sets its annual budget, time your raise request three or so months before that budget is finalized, recommends Lucas. Sometimes, she said, "once they've divided up that money there's no more money."

Do your homework

Don't ever expect a raise just because you've been at your job for a certain amount of time, Ochstein says.

"That's not necessarily the case," he said. "There needs to be an argument built around why the raise is deserved, and that's why preparation before asking is essential."

Lansky recommends keeping a "job journal" to keep track of your accomplishments to remind yourself—and your boss—how valuable you are.

"I would go back over the year and look at what you've contributed to the company [before asking for a raise]," Lansky said. "That will be much easier if you've kept a job journal and spent five minutes on Friday of every week and wrote down, `what did I accomplish this week?'"

Know how much you're worth

There are plenty of websites that can tell you approximate salaries for someone with your job in your city. If you're going to ask co-workers how much they make, tread very, very lightly.

"Employees should never ask around internally of what others are making," Ochstein said.

But remember, it is illegal for your boss to prohibit employees from talking about salaries. The prohibition on talking about money is just a social taboo.

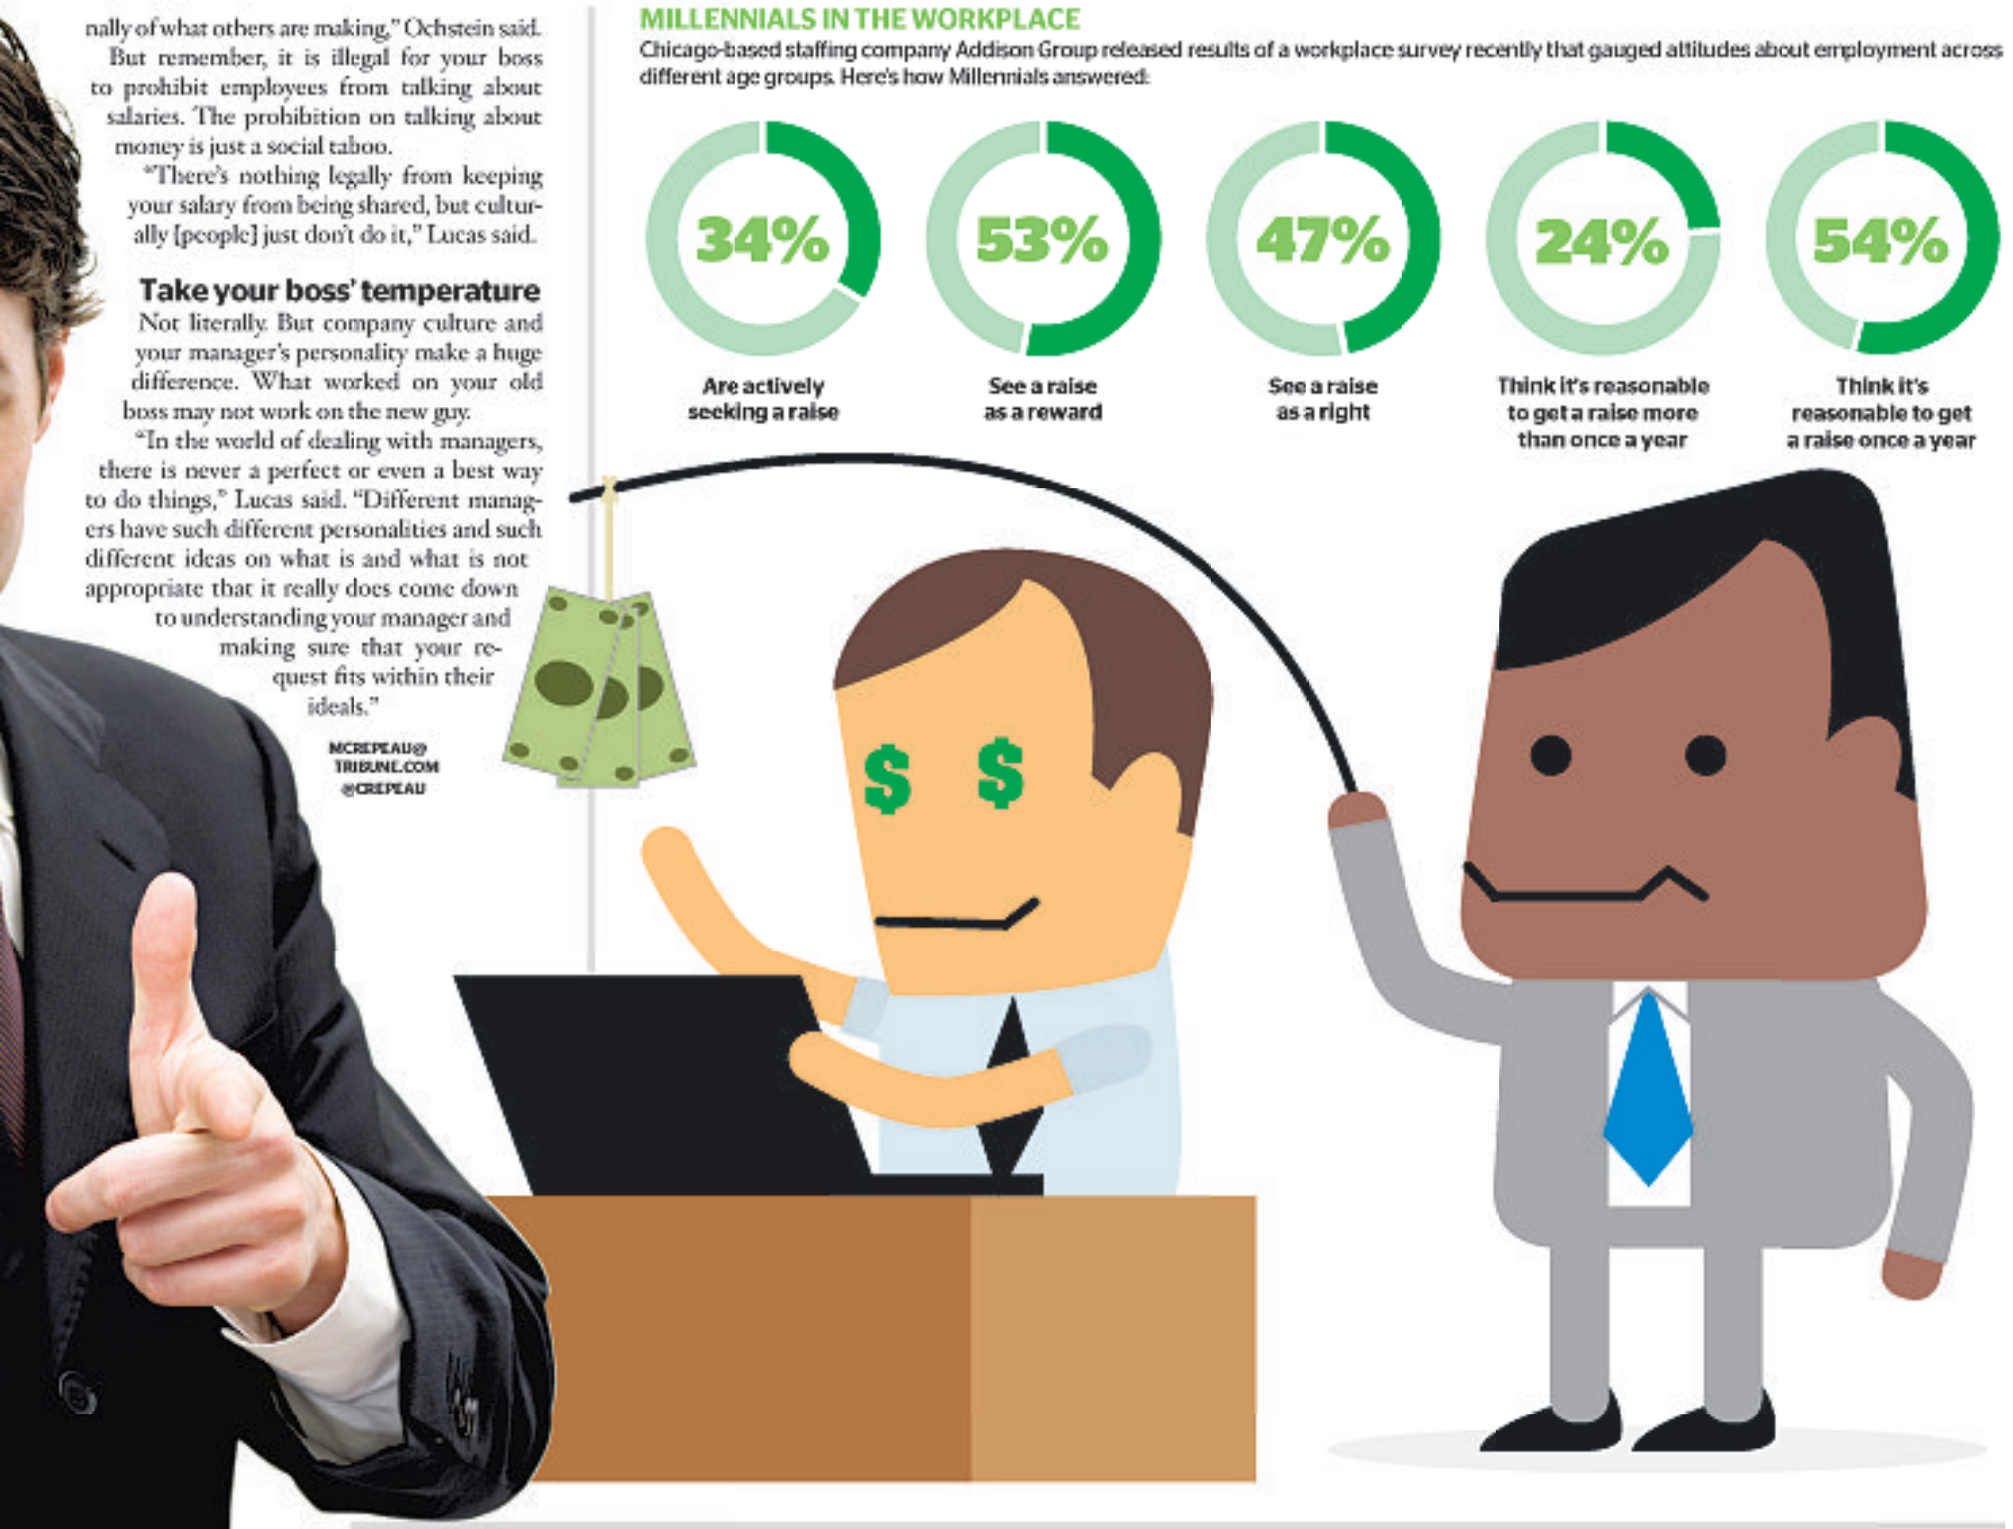

"There's nothing legally from keeping your salary from being shared, but culturally [people] just don't do it," Lucas said.

Take your boss' temperature

Not literally. But company culture and your manager's personality make a huge difference. What worked on your old boss may not work on the new guy.

"In the world of dealing with managers, there is never a perfect or even a best way to do things," Lucas said. "Different managers have such different personalities and such different ideas on what is and what is not appropriate that it really does come down to understanding your manager and making sure that your request fits within their ideals."

Millennials tend to follow the money at work

Chicago Tribune

Half of Millennials say they are willing to jump ship at work if quitting for another job is the only way to get a raise.

That's according to a survey by Addison Group, a Chicago-based professional staffing services firm.

Addison also found that about 40 percent of Millennials also expect a promotion every one or two years; a third said they're looking for a raise or promotion this year.

The study surveyed 1,006 working Americans born between 1946 and 1995.

Millennials, more than older generations, view having their own office as a right rather than a reward—38 percent, compared with 29 percent of baby boomers and Gen Xers, the survey showed.

Millennials also are more likely to believe that they should earn bonuses and raises more often than once a year, and 47 percent believe—along with their GenX counterparts—that getting a raise is a right, according to the survey results.

There may be other ways to keep Millennials happy, the survey showed.

For example, 43 percent of Millennials described their ideal company as one that provides internal training opportunities.

Less than a third of Millennials are satisfied with training and learning opportunities available at work.

Millennials want to experience frequent progression in their careers, the survey found.

Two in 5 of them said people should hold five or more different jobs throughout their careers.

City opens two new parks over weekend

RedEye and Tribune reports

Two major Chicago parks opened over the weekend, giving Millennium Park a sister downtown and transforming the grounds of a former industrial site into the first and only park in Little Village.

Parts of the new $60 million Maggie Daley Park opened Saturday, including the park's signature feature—the quarter-mile long and 20-foot wide J.B. and M.K. Pritzker Family Skating Ribbon. More than 100 partons waited at least an hour to rent skates and glide on 27,500 square feet of ice surface.

Mayor Emanuel and former Mayor Richard M. Daley attended the ribbon cutting for the park, which is named in honor of Daley's wife, who died in 2011. On Sunday, Emanuel also attended the opening of the park in Little Village, tentatively called La Villita.

Ald. George Cardenas, whose 12th Ward includes the park at 2800 S. Sacramento Ave., called the opening "a triumph" for the residents.

"This community is being transformed literally," Cardenas said.

Providing what officials have called much-needed green space in the densely populated Latino neighborhood, the new $11 million park is the biggest one to open in the city this year. Maggie Daley Park spans 25 acres, but most of it doesn't open until spring.

3 anti-brutality marchers arrested on battery charges

Chicago Tribune

Three men were arrested and charged over the weekend as they took part in police brutality protests along Michigan Avenue in the Magnificent Mile and Gold Coast areas.

David L. Rucker, 25, and Alfredo Reyes, 21, were each charged with felony aggravated battery and misdemeanor resisting after prosecutors said they punched a police officer who was trying to get them back onto the sidewalk in the 500 block of North Michigan on Saturday afternoon, according to Cook County court records.

Rucker yelled an obscenity at one police officer before punching him repeatedly, according to Assistant State's Attorney Alex Molesky. Reyes punched the same officer as he was being taken into custody, according to court records.

The officer suffered bruising and swelling to the right eye and left hip, court records state.

Rucker, of the 4700 block of South Forestville Avenue in Bronzeville, and Reyes, of the 3400 block of South 61st Court in Cicero, were each ordered held on $75,000 bond.

About an hour before they were arrested, Lookman A. Muhammed, 21, of Evanston, was arrested in the 900 block of North Michigan during protests and charged with misdemeanor battery and resisting.

Muhammed was being escorted back onto the sidewalk when he told police, "you can't stop me from crossing the street," according to court records.

He reportedly then "flailed his arms in an aggressive manner" and struck a police officer in the chest and left shoulder with an open hand, before resisting as he was being handcuffed.

Muhammed, of the 2200 block of Emerson Street, was ordered released on his own recognizance Sunday.

BEARS MIGHT AS WELL START NOW ON THEIR OFFSEASON HOMEWORK

RedEye

Some might say it's too soon to hand out grades for the 2014 Bears. Well, with the playoffs officially out of reach, that's a tough sell. Former Bears fullback Jason McKie has shared his knowledge all season, and this week RedEye asked him to grade some of the Bears' key players and hand out homework.

JAY CUTLER C+

McKie's take: He's had some good games and he's had some really bad games. He's got to stay consistent. Obviously he got paid the big contract and everybody expected more from him. A lot of people make it out to be just him; I'm not gonna say everything's his fault. Overall I know everybody on that team is upset with the way the season has gone.

Homework: Not turning the ball over. If he improves upon that, that would help his consistency.

NFC NORTH	W	L	GB
Detroit	10	4	—
Green Bay	10	4	—
Minnesota	6	8	4
BEARS	5	8	4.5

MATT FORTE A-

McKie's take: He had a couple fumbles that Matt himself will probably tell you he can't have. He'll beat himself up about it in the offseason. But he's been the most consistent guy. I love the way he's been professional about things. Even though you're a guy who wants more carries, he's not in the newspaper complaining about things, and that's Matt Forte for you.

Homework: Not fumbling. It happens. I would just say for him, [he needs] to continue playing at a high level. He puts in the work and that's why he's able to perform at a high level.

ALSHON JEFFERY B+

McKie's take: Overall the offense hasn't performed well, but he's been one of the guys that's been a bright spot. He's had some big games. He's had some games where he disappeared, but there have been some games where he's stepped [up] and played big and made big plays for his team.

Homework: Run blocking. That's for all receivers; it's not something they do all the time.

Matt Forte
CHRIS SWEDA/TRIBUNE

MARTELLUS BENNETT B-

McKie's take: There were some games when he's been really good, but he's had a lot of drops this year. Take away half those drops and that's even more big plays he's made. He has the ability to be the top tight end in the game. He can run all the routes, stretch the field, but he's also a solid blocker. There are not a lot of complete tight ends like him.

Homework: Just continue to work hard. He'll go back and re-evaluate his game and continue to be one of the better tight ends in the league.

USA TODAY SPORTS; GETTY IMAGES

Jared Allen
USA TODAY SPORTS

JARED ALLEN C+

McKie's take: The season's not over, but he hasn't had the sack total that we've seen in the past. I expected him to have double-digit sacks this year.

Homework: Just getting back to being the old Jared Allen ... getting off the ball quick, causing havoc in the backfield and getting quarterbacks on the ground.

SHEA MCCLELLIN C

McKie's take: He missed some games due to injury, new position this year. It's hard to do that, go from being a defensive end to being an inside linebacker. If he does continue to be a linebacker, I expect him to play much better next year.

Homework: He's got to make more impact plays, play a little bit faster. He's real athletic but he doesn't play that fast all the time.

KYLE FULLER B-

McKie's take: Great rookie start to his career, made a lot of big plays. He got banged up like all rookies do. I give him a B- because I want to see how he's gonna finish this season.

Homework: Just continue improving as a pro. He's going to get more comfortable, now I just want him to be more impactful.

LANCE BRIGGS C

McKie's take: He would say he didn't have a good year because he was hurt. Playing banged up all year, he wasn't able to be the Lance Briggs we've seen in the past. [But] for some linebackers, a Lance Briggs average season is one of their best seasons because he's been that good for a long time.

Homework: Take care of his body in the offseason; that's the main thing for a guy like him when you get older.

REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR JASON MCKIE CAN BE HEARD ON 87.7 FM THE GAME FROM 8-10 A.M. SUNDAYS.

BEARS BRAIN TEASER ANSWER

By Mick Swasko | REDEYE

For the final Bears Brain Teaser, we could focus on horrible statistics from this season, but why torture ourselves? This is far from the worst season this team has ever seen, so this week's question was: What year did the Bears record their worst season ever, what was their record, where did they play and what was the movie that was inspired by events of that season?

Answer: The Bears' 1-13 season in 1969 was played at Wrigley Field and inspired "Brian's Song," about the bond that formed between teammates Brian Piccolo and Gale Sayers as Piccolo battled cancer.

RedEye sports editor Chris Sosa (@redeyesportschi) will announce the winner via Twitter this week. Thanks to all who entered! MSWASKO@TRIBUNE.COM | @SWASKO

1	How does Steve Kerr have the Golden State Warriors playing so well?	He's using the "MJ Method" and having Michael Jordan berate them during practice, just like the good old days.	He's getting all of his coaching advice from the great Dennis Rodman.	The air is crisp in San Francisco and good for the lungs.	When Draymond Green is on your roster, great things automatically happen.	Golden State was made for the NBA's Golden Boy.
2	If you were to change the pose of the Heisman Trophy, what would it look like?	Like a quarterback dodging an indictment.	One hand carrying a football, the other behind his back holding a mound of booster cash.	A player holding CASH in his straight arm.	A golden sculpted collegiate athlete accepting money under a table.	Put a surgical mask on the face so he won't catch Angelina Jolie's chickenpox.
3	What did Luol Deng do after the Heat played the Bulls on Sunday?	He and Kirk Hinrich went for a drive dressed as Crockett and Tubbs from "Miami Vice," like in the good old days.	Run 40 minutes of wind sprints—he instinctively does that whenever he gets around Thibs.	Cried like a baby in the fetal position, somewhere in a dark locker room corner.	Invited Jimmy Butler over to play "Mario Kart 64" and eat Bagel Bites.	Of course he took the Bulls to drink at The Clevelander with all the other South Beach tourists.
4	Who's been more disappointing: the Bears or the Saints?	Not since Mike Ditka posed with Ricky Williams in a wedding dress have both teams been so embarrassed.	Both George Halas and Tom Fears are rolling in their graves.	LOL! Saints still have something to play for. Bears stopped playing Week 4.	The Bears are a disappointment to professional sports every season in general, so, I'd go with them.	The Saints, but at least they benefit from the pope's blessing.
5	How will the Bulls' Doug McDermott rehab from knee surgery?	He'll have Michael Jordan yell at his knee and call it weak, like in the good old days.	Thibs has him easing back in with two-hour workouts, five days a week.	Hopefully unlike D-Rose, taking the year off.	Guys from Ames, Iowa, statistically always rebound well from knee surgeries. Wikipedia it if you don't believe me.	Six to eight weeks off? Read Lena Dunham's new book and try not to hang yourself.

DO YOU SUFFER FROM LOW BACK PAIN?

Have you had this pain for more than 6 months?
Are you at least 18 years old?

IF YES

You may be able to participate in a clinical research study.

Researchers at Northwestern University are investigating the brain and what causes chronic pain.

The study lasts for 8 weeks and involves 6 visits to the study site.

THE DIGIT

32,310

That's how many points Kobe Bryant has made in his career, enough to pass Michael Jordan (32,292) on the NBA's all-time career scoring list. On Sunday, Bryant made two free throws in the second quarter of the Lakers' game at Minnesota, the first one tying and the second one passing Jordan's record. Bryant moves up to third place on the list, behind Kareem Abdul-Jabbar (38,387) and Karl Malone (36,928).

Got Melky?

The White Sox's stealth pursuit of free agent Melky Cabrera (right) paid off late Saturday when the former Blue Jays outfielder agreed to a three-year deal worth an estimated $42-43.5 million, pending a physical. Cabrera does carry some baggage after being suspended for 50 games during the 2012 season for testing positive for performance-enhancing drugs, but the move gives the Sox some much-needed on-base percentage from the left field spot.

The new guy

The Blackhawks traded forward Jeremy Morin to the Blue Jackets for defenseman Tim Erixon on Sunday, and Erixon made his debut against Calgary at the United Center on Sunday night. Erixon, 23, had one goal and five assists in 19 games with the Blue Jackets this season.

One for the books

It's not even April, and Jon Lester's (right) already breaking some records. The new Cubs pitcher set the records for largest signing bonus ($30 million) and biggest upfront payment ($15 million), according to ESPN, with his $155 million, six-year deal.

Rock is just being his brazen self

Los Angeles Times

Chris Rock's manner offstage is different than it is onstage. He doesn't pace back and forth like a tiger in a cage. His voice doesn't go up quite as high when he's making a point. He doesn't bristle with live-wire energy. But one thing is the same: He is unafraid to be brutally candid.

Take the way he tells the story behind his new comedy, "Top Five."

In summer 2012, the stand-up comic turned actor and filmmaker was in Massachusetts working on "Grown Ups 2." He didn't have a whole lot to do in the movie, which meant he had endless hours of down time.

"You don't know where 'Grown Ups 2' is going to fall, quality-wise, but you know it will make money, which will get me some goodwill," Rock said. "So let me write a movie."

Rock had collaborated on scripts before and directed a couple of movies: 2003's "Head of State," in which he played an unlikely presidential candidate, and 2007's romantic comedy "I Think I Love My Wife." But nothing he'd done on the big screen had ever approached the heights of artistic daring or popular appeal he'd reached as a stand-up comic. And he knew it.

"I just had this nagging feeling like, 'I haven't done a really good movie yet,' " Rock said. "I'd written and directed movies, and they were OK. They have their moments. But none of them felt like me from beginning to end. They felt like a sanitized version, honestly."

Bitingly satirical, brazenly profane and sometimes raunchy, the R-rated comedy, which opened Friday, stars Rock as a stand-up turned movie star named Andre Allen who is undergoing a midlife career crisis. Struggling to reinvent himself as a serious actor, tugged between his glamorous Hollywood life and his inner-city roots, Andre pours his heart out to a journalist (Rosario Dawson) over the course of one tumultuous and at times calamitous day.

Since its well-received premiere in September at the Toronto International Film Festival, "Top Five" has been hailed as a breakthrough for Rock as a writer, director and leading man, the most unadulterated cinematic expression yet of the irreverent, boundary-pushing brand of comedy he's known for. Indeed, that was Rock's goal from the start: to make a film that from beginning to end felt like him.

Chris Rock in 'Top Five'

"Chris knew if he was going to make another movie, he had to do something that was more personal," said Scott Rudin, who produced "Top Five" and is known for shepherding Oscar fare such as "The Social Network" and "Captain Phillips" to the screen. "The whole idea was, how do you turn the giant appeal of his stand-up into a full movie? What would the Chris Rock opus be?"

HOROSCOPES

TAROT.COM

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
There is no stopping you now if your motives are clear, so make certain that you are heading in the right direction before you're too far down the path. Listen to your intuition and then follow your heart.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your cool and collected rational brain is working at its peak and optimistically influences your thoughts. Your intuition tells you that everything can work out for the best if you move forward with your agenda.

Aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Those closest to you are reflecting your most powerful dreams right back at you now. It's as if they already know what is best for you, and are encouraging you to act accordingly. While you're deciding what to do, make sure that everyone knows how much you appreciate their support.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
It is uncharacteristic of you to make a big deal about your work, but something inside you is itching to get the recognition that you deserve. Letting the spotlight fall on you now won't hurt. In fact, the opposite is true; the attention just might do you a world of good.

Aries March 21-April 19
You might give the impression that you're invincible today. Nevertheless, there is an inkling of insecurity arising. Acknowledge the warnings of your inner voice, but don't waste time doubting your abilities.

Taurus April 20-May 20
You may still be uncertain about recent choices that impact those closest to you. Even if you don't have all the answers now, just be sincere about your intentions.

Gemini May 21-June 20
The intensity may be slowly settling down, but it doesn't seem fast enough to you. Don't plan your escape too quickly because there are still lessons to learn from the situation as the energy plays on through to its conclusion.

Cancer June 21-July 22
If you have unfinished financial business, now would be a propitious time to tie up loose ends. The question is how much effort should you put into the details? Unfortunately, no one has the answer but you; become your own conscientious taskmaster and your efforts will pay off.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22
Spiritual mysteries may seem more fascinating now as you receive indecipherable signals from the hidden realms. Even if you decide to follow your instincts, keeping others informed about your choices enables everyone to be on the same page.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Sometimes it's logical to set rationality aside and trust in your feelings. Oddly enough, irrationality has its own place in your world, too. Facts are important, but now it's time to temporarily put them on the back burner. Open your heart.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You find yourself playing the role of a diplomat as you attempt to ameliorate the building tension. Fortunately, your optimism isn't wasted since your well-intended actions can help patch up a difficult situation.

Scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
The mixture of positive and negative forces combine into an even more powerful energy. Fear and shame transform into love and compassion, enabling you to move your life in the best direction.

Girl group members hope Harmony carries them

ABOUT LAST NIGHT
Luis Gomez
» lgomez@tribune.com
» @TribLuis

Who is the last girl group to really make it big in the music industry?

I asked this question to the members of Fifth Harmony before their performance Wednesday at the AT&T store on Michigan Avenue. Up until that point in the interview, the bandmates—who won MTV's "Artist to Watch" award at the MTV Video Music Awards in August and performed in front of the president at the National Christmas Tree Lighting ceremony earlier this month—had taken turns responding to my questions, almost as if there was a designated order.

That "order" ceased for this question, with the women talking over each other the way you'd expect when five people are involved—especially five people in their late teens and early 20s.

Lauren Jauregui responded the Pussycat Dolls, but in question form. Normani Kordei Hamilton threw out the name Danity Kane. Camila Cabello disagreed: "I don't think so. I think Destiny's Child, I would say. Like, huge girl group—Destiny's Child." Dinah Jane Hansen agreed with that. Ally Brooke? "Pussycat Dolls," Brooke said. "They were taking over. And Danity Kane were huge as well."

Once Jauregui realized there wasn't going to be an unanimous answer, she attempted to summarize their responses.

"We don't know, clearly, so ..." Jauregui said.

The members of Fifth Harmony grew up listening to some of the girl groups that came before them. Cabello said there isn't one group in particular she and her bandmates are trying to emulate, but she does see some similarities with a few of them.

"There's different things in each girl group that we kind of connect to, like the Spice Girls and their authenticity and personality," Cabello said. "And the fierceness of the Pussycat Dolls and the vocals of Destiny's Child."

So many babies

Forget Santa. The stork was delivering this week's gifts—at least in Hollywood. Kourtney Kardashian and Scott Disick welcomed a baby boy on Sunday (no word yet on whether said baby will return to Kardashian's family tradition of a K name, unlike his big brother and sister), while "Nashville" actress Hayden Panettiere and fiance Wladimir Klitschko greeted a baby girl on Tuesday, and news of Zoe Saldana and hubby Marco Perego having their twin boys came out Friday, eonline.com reports. Cigars and diapers all around!

It's her party and she'll rage if she wants to

If the endless stream of holiday party posts clogging your feeds lately have got your FOMO cranked all the way up, might we suggest not looking at any photos from Taylor Swift's 25th birthday party Friday night? The reigning pop princess (sorry, Brit) threw a b-day bash at her New York digs, Buzzfeed reported, and guests included Jay Z, Beyonce, Sam Smith, Chrissy Teigen, 5 Seconds of Summer, Ansel Elgort and Selena Gomez. Oh, and a dude in a poop emoji mask that turned out to be Justin Timberlake. Totally casual Friday night.

THE QUOTE

"I found out last night that I have chickenpox so I will be home itching and missing everyone, and I can't believe it because this film means so much to me."

—Angelina Jolie, in an online video posted Friday, about why the director will be missing several upcoming events promoting her film, "Unbroken." The fact that she'll also be missing a lot of uncomfortable questions after the recent Sony hack revealed her to be the subject of several nasty emails between company execs is an added bonus.

THE QUOTE

"No. Do you know why? Because I'm Batman. I'm very secure in that."

—Michael Keaton to Variety, when asked recently if he feels envious of Ben Affleck taking on the Caped Crusader role he held in 1989 and 1992.

HOT DATE

March 10, 2017

That's when yet another King Kong flick, "Kong: Skull Island," is set to hit the big screen, Entertainment Weekly reports. The movie, staring Tom Hiddleston as part of a group of adventurers exploring the king-sized ape's 'hood will also be released in 3-D and IMAX formats. Because, you know, releasing only one already-overdone, unoriginal, big-budget blockbuster is definitely not enough.
